On 15/12/2022, the federal Parliament voted the law on the protection of reporters of breaches of Union or national law established within a legal entity in the private sector. This law is a transposition of a European directive. It aims to better protect whistleblowers from possible retaliation by the employer and obliges companies with 50 or more employees to set up an internal reporting channel.

Through this internal channel, employees - but possibly also other parties such as directors, shareholders, subcontractors and suppliers - can report abuses and malpractices within the company. For companies with 250 or more employees, it should even be possible to make an anonymous report. Whether or not a report is made anonymously, the employer is obliged to have it handled confidentially by a neutral and independent person inside or outside the company.
